John Kenneth Hutchison

Discovers what could prove to be the link between man and machine! Team Hutchison is pleased at long last to present the Atlantis Series

The story of the lost continent of Atlantis starts in 355 B.C. with the Greek philosopher Plato. Plato had planned to write a trilogy of books discussing the nature of man, the creation of the world, and the story of Atlantis, as well as other subjects. Only the first book was ever completed. The second book was abandoned part way through, and the final book was never even started.

In Plato's book, Timaeus, a character named Kritias tells an account of Atlantis that has been in his family for generations. According to the character, the story was originally told to his ancestor, Solon, by a priest during Solon's visit to Egypt.

There had been a powerful empire located to the west of the "Pillars of Hercules" (what we now call the Strait of Gibraltar) on an island in the Atlantic Ocean. The nation there had been established by Poseidon, the God of the Sea. Poseidon fathered five sets of twins on the island. The firstborn, Atlas, had the continent and the surrounding ocean named for him. Poseidon divided the land into ten sections, each to be ruled by a son, or his heirs.

The capital city of Atlantis was a marvel of architecture and engineering. The city was composed of a series of concentric walls and canals. At the very center was a hill, and on top of the hill a temple to Poseidon. Inside was a gold statue of the God of the Sea showing him driving six winged horses.

About 9000 years before the time of Plato, the people of Atlantis became corrupt and greedy and after a failed attempt to invade Athens, the gods decided to destroy them. A violent earthquake shook the land, giant waves rolled over the shores, and the island sank into the sea, never to be seen again. "in a single day and night of misfortune". Once a thriving, wealthy, peaceful civilization, the entire island was said to have disappeared into the Atlantic Ocean after fierce earthquakes & floods. How did they manage their rise to power? What possible connection to nature had they discovered? How was the fabled telepathic technology managed and wired? John Hutchison attempts to provide an answer to these questions and more by way of discovery and paying attention for nature's cues and secrets.

John discovered an ancient technology right under our noses that is furiously busy turning matter into humus (< Latin: earth, ground) referring to any organic matter that has reached a point of stability, where it will break down no further and might, if conditions do not change, remain as it is for centuries, if not millennia. The technology responsible for this is none other than the mushroom. Paul Stamets on you-tube explains his thesis in "6 ways mushrooms can save the world". As a pioneer in his field, Paul gives a wealth of information on one of earth's oldest and largest species.

Of course it's only natural that John and his interest in high voltage and Paul's research into saving the world with the mushroom should mix at some point. The common mushroom shares with humans about 42% of our DNA. The funny thing is this, while investigating methods of growing oil eating fungi by way of Vandegraaph generators and Tesla Coil lightning strikes, John happened upon a method of growing mushrooms at an advanced rate. Announced April 2010, Iwate University in Japan demonstrated that out of 10 strains tested, 8 are known to respond very well to high voltage. Further research also suggests that if John were to treat the mushroom crops with high voltage fields, they would grow at an incredible rate. This was the basis for a theory that the Gulf oil damage could actually be reduced by this re-programmed strain of mushroom. Breed, electrified, and breed. Eventually the strain reproduces on demand and rapidly grows to five times its natural size, over 200% its natural rate as well. This strain eats oil, plastic and other non-biodegradable debris. The technology isn't new by any means, once again, our own personal historical engineer John is able to illuminate overlooked natural allies in our quest to advance past this state of affairs.

Very soon John would like to begin distributing "treated" mushroom spore kits for planting at home to interested clients and fans by paypal mail order. We are just waiting for certain testing phases to be complete as well as environmental projections on this modified species and how it will interact with the indigenous life around it. But at this point we can announce this exciting news and contribute with information by email and as well, the link to donate to John's testing of the Gulf disaster is at the bottom of this page. But what of Atlantis then? As it turns out, many discoveries come as accidental unexpected results in an entirely different experiment. As many of you know, the Crystal Power converter has been a very hot topic since the 1990's for John. During the breeding of the mushroom crops, there was a power-cell used as a field detector for the mushroom crops measuring the water level in the area and upper levels of zero point activity as a side experiment. One day as a small accident occurs in the lab, John noticed a spike in the equipment readouts. This leads to an attempt to recreate the incident. Once a small band of the electrical magnetic spectrum was identified, it was then amplified and studied. What was noticed was that the crystal power converter which operates based on the Casmir effect had a relationship with the organic life that had grown around it. After much study, it has become apparent that the missing link between the mind and the machine has been observed in action. These mushroom coated bio chips send and receive things in an upper band of zero point spectrum. Welcome to the age of the cyborg, and telepathic interfaces for machines!

In an unprecedented effort to remove some of the effects of the Gulf oil disaster, John Hutchison stumbles upon what could prove to be an ancient technology linking man and machine. In the beginning of John's Gulf effort, he was trying different experiments with frequencies to reduce the pollutants found in the waters for over a year now. This has been an expensive process. If you have any suggestions or offer any assistance, please email the link below and co-ordinate things with John Hutchison personally. Thank you to everyone who supports John, always.
